Support Team, to other contractor support groups, or to technical support from the hardware or software vendors involved.

A key element of the system support is being able to restore critical files when necessary. Backups of desktop Mac/Windows systems will be conducted on a weekly basis, with the expectation that files can be recovered within one day of a request for restoration. UNIX/Linux systems will have daily incremental backups and weekly to monthly to quarterly full backups.

The task will provide computer security support for the systems under this Task. This includes ensuring the computer systems comply with Army and/or NASA computer security policies.

This task provides system administration support and, therefore, computer security risks are inherent. Risks are mitigated through a technical approach of maintaining awareness of emerging security risks, implementing system and security patches, and applying industry standard tools to identify and eliminate vulnerabilities.

Work will normally be performed during regular work hours, with constant support coverage throughout the work day. The lunch period, being an important coverage span, will also be covered to ensure prompt support for customer walk-in requests. Occasionally, work may need to be scheduled and performed outside of normal business hours, on weekends, evenings or early mornings to minimize disruption for the users.
