“Every time I put on this spacesuit, I forget this suit is so __________. How do we do this so often, again?” you say, bemoaning the __________ space suit you’re putting on.

“It’s not like it’s going to be annoying when you’re __________ in low gravity. And come on, we’re going to __________ today!” Callie says. You finally finish gearing up, and both of you head out to the lunar habitat.

As you get into the rover, you admire the __________ view. The surface of the Moon looks wonderfully __________ today.

Looking out at the gray horizon, Callie says, “Wow. Looks just like ____________.”

You continue to move __________ along, but when you see some __________ on the ground, you stop to take a look.

“I thought it was __________ at first, but __________ what a find! Everyone else will love it if we bring it back.” Callie says, inspecting the __________ item before picking it up.

“You make it sound like we’re hunting for food. I’ll stick to my dehydrated __________ instead, thank you very much.”

The two of you continue __________ the area. At one point, you stare out into space and see a small light that you identify as __________. When you regroup, you compare the __________ Moon rocks that you and Callie found. A couple of hers look like __________ __________, while yours look like __________ __________.

Callie suddenly says, “Race you!” and the two of you attempt to run back to the rover, but with the gravity you both look more like __________ __________.

Back at the base, mission control congratulates the two of you on doing some __________ scavenging. You and Callie high-five and say, “__________!”
