

NASA Student Launch ARW Selling Student Launch to Your Administration

PRESENTED BY NASA Student Launch

DATE July 24, 2023

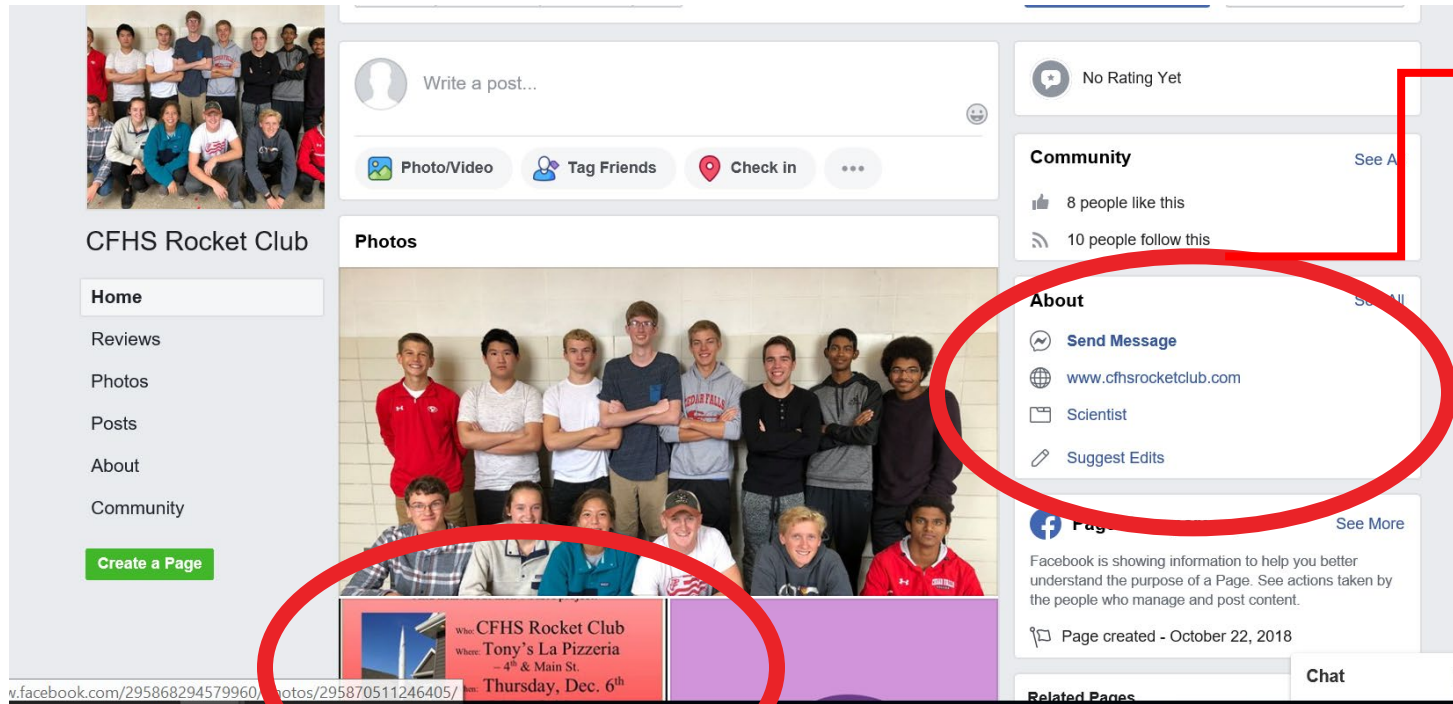

NASA STEM

Social Media Campaign

The team will establish a social media presence to inform the public about team activities.

Add a team website, this is not a requirement but will help tell your teams story and create media traction.

Encourage people viewing your social media platform to ask questions and have options for them to become more involved with their local/school rocket team.

Post upcoming events, meetings or fundraising events to your community

Community Engagement

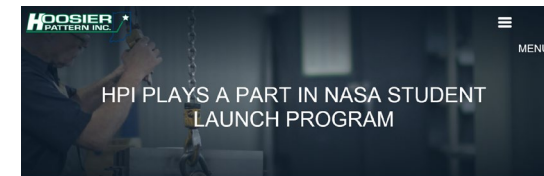

Learn about your local area's main companies – do they relate at all to STEM? Maybe they are NOT an Aerospace company but are still interested in helping a local STEM club that works directly with NASA.

Companies might use something your students are working on.

- Promotion by company
- Fulfills the company's community engagement
- Can lead to a long-term relationship,

The NASA Student Launch Program is a year-long engineering design program that allows college teams to work right alongside NASA engineers to build and launch a model rocket to a height of one mile. Each year students design, build, and test the model rocket capable of reaching 1 mile, while also carrying a scientific payload. This program also features a series of reports that must be submitted to NASA that go

Insurance through NAR

The NAR policy limit is $5 million per occurrence.

NAR individual insurance is primary coverage, meaning it applies for all your rocketry activities covered under the NAR Safety Code.

Non-members are not covered by NAR insurance. To obtain coverage, they must join and become members of the NAR.

Members of teams participating in national student rocketry events officially sponsored by the NAR are covered only when they fly at an organized NAR section launch.

Coverage applies to losses arising out of NAR sport rocketry activities
